

'Percival has gone now,' said Neville. 'He is thinking of nothing but the match.'... now he is young. Not a thread, not a sheet of paper lies between him and the sun, between him and the rain, between him and the moon as he lies naked, tumbled, hot, on his bed.

